Close Service Contact us Help Thanks to double inputs and outputs, various stereo or multi amp setups can be controlled and with the Minimum knob youve practically got a rhythm preset available. The FV 500 fulfils this task in contrast to most guitar potentiometers practically without sound loss particularly before the preamp of the amp. The tuner out is also very practical; With a connected tuner you can tune silently! Amazon Customer 5.0 out of 5 stars Good quality. Good job. I was a little disappointed with the volume drop, but compensated with more amp volume. For me, it worked best as the last gadget before the amp ran stomp boxes before volume pedal. So I decided to connect it after the distortion and VOILA, IT WORKS PERFECTLY AS A VOLUME PEDAL. I DID NOT LOSE ANY OF MY DISTORTION. Its small so it fits on a small board which is great. Im a big guy though so i made a mistake using this pedal. There's no adjustable tension on this thing, which sucks because personally i don't like how easily the pedal travels but it does have a minimum output pot. Not usable for my needs but many will find it helpful. One thing to take note of that you won't see anywhere period except the user manual is that output 2 does NOT pass audio to the tuner out. Overall a decent volume pedal but i wish i had a bigger board so i could get something like the Boss fv500h. I use this pedal to control two mono instruments and it does the job perfectly.

I also like the tuner output feature which is better than some of the tuner pedals I tried that added noise to the loop. Highly recommended. Sorry, we failed to record your vote. Please try again Stereo and it has a knob on the side that lets you set the minimum volume. What a good idea!!!! And that is not all. It also has a separate outlet for your tuner!!! IF and I mean IF I had to level a criticism I would like it to be a touch heavier but as most of us use velcro on pedal boards it matters not. Sorry, we failed to record your vote. No commissions, no kick backs, no hierarchy, no pushy sales, no BS. We are proud of our independent corner store since 1967, we love our gear, and we love getting you the right gear for your needs. We like to think that's why we're the people's music store. We took it out for a spin, check out our impressions in the rundown below. The piece was crafted to be connected before guitar effects units and utilizes a variety of useful additions. First of all, this is a stereo device, meaning that it features a set of two inputs and a pair of output. While this is not essential for many players, the stereo configuration allows the user to plug in two instruments into the pedal at the same time, as well as distribute the signal to two amplifiers or sound systems. No big deal, of course. We also like the convenient size and the fact that the pedal easily fits most pedalboards. You get what you paid for, and then some. As far as value for money goes, this is one of the strongest devices of the entire niche that we can recommend. Good stuff! For more Volume Pedal Currently On The Market, click here. Shop with confidence. For those of you who don't know, BOSS is known for developing some of the best quality pedals around right now.

The downside to this is that most BOSS pedals can get rather expensive, which can turn off some users who are not looking to spend a whole lot on guitar accessories. Thankfully, the BOSS FV50H is a rather affordable option for those of you who are looking to buy a highquality volume pedal at a reasonable price. In this review we will be checking out everything you need to know about the FV50H, so you will have a good idea about whether this volume pedal is right for you or not. So without further ado, let's go ahead and check this pedal out! FV50H vs. FV50L Let me start off by mentioning that there are two different BOSS FV50 models. The one that we are reviewing today is the FV50H, so don't let that be confused with the FV50L that BOSS has also released. The difference between these two pedals comes down to where they should be placed in your signal chain. The FV50H should be placed at the start of your signal chain, while the FV50L should be placed at the end. You should also note that the FV50H is a highimpedance volume pedal, while the FV50L is a lowimpedance volume pedal. In addition to this, the FV50L can be used with both guitars and keyboards. These are the key differences between the BOSS FV50H and the FV50L. As you would expect, the FV50H is very simple and easytouse. The pedal features 5 x 1.4" jacks that are located on the side of the unit. 2 of these are input jacks, 2 are output jacks, and the last one is a tuner out jack. One thing that I should mention is that this pedal is a stereo device. This is made apparent by the two input and output jacks that are located on the side of the pedal. To be honest, I don't think this feature is really that necessary, but it means you will be able to plug two instruments into the pedal and alter their volume at the same time. This can be pretty handy if you are planning on using the pedal on stage with another performer. The FV50H also features a tuner out jack that allows you to obviously plug your tuner into the pedal.

This is a nice little addition to have to keep your set up nice and neat. The pedal is constructed out of both metal and plastic. As you can likely see, the top of the pedal is made out of plastic while the base of the pedal is made out of metal. As for the looks of the pedal, I would say that the FV50H looks pretty nice overall. I am personally a big fan of the classy black finish. In saying that though, I think the blue patch found on top looks a bit out of place. This is obviously just me being a bit nitpicky, but that's what you have to do when you are reviewing a new product. I try my absolute best to be as thorough as possible. This is a staple feature that is seen in many of the other volume pedals that have been produced by BOSS. As the name suggests, this knob sets the minimum volume of the pedal. This will change depending on the type of performance you are planning to perform. Final Thoughts Let me start off by saying that I think the BOSS FV50H is a very nice volume pedal. I am not going to lie, the light weight of the FV50H made me a little bit worried that the pedal wouldn't hold up very well, but I have read some customer reviews online who have said that their pedal is still going strong after many years of owning it. Overall, the BOSS FV50H is very light, durable, and easytouse. In addition to this, it is also reasonably priced for a pedal of this quality. If you are a guitarist who is looking for a pretty straightforward volume pedal then the FV50H could be exactly what you have been looking for. I have no problem recommending this pedal to any of our readers, regardless of whether you are a beginner or more experienced musician. Anyone will be able to benefit from a volume pedal like this one. For more information on the BOSS FV50H, you can check out the instruction manual here. Abhisek Mukherjee 5.0 out of 5 stars Enter the Boss Stereo Volume Pedal. Then from the pedal outputs to the amplifiers. It works perfectly without any other setup. The pedal action is just stiff enough so it holds position if you move your foot off the pedal, and the volume limiter knob ensures you won't accidentally cut off all sound. The FV50H high impedance is for use with guitars. There's also a more expensive version with a metal case FV500L. Sorry, we failed to record your vote.
